Legumes, Grasses and Cereals Used for Silage

The term grass silage now includes all cereals except corn and the sorgos and is different from them in that special precautions must be taken upon ensiling for the best preservation.

Grass silage may be made successfully from many crops. Legumes, such as alfalfa, clovers, soybeans, lespedeza and peas; cereals, such as oats, wheat, rye and barley; grasses, such as timothy, sudan grass, canary grass, brome grass and orchard grass, and mixtures of these crops.

The illustration by Purdue university shows method of dumping silage that saves in labor and quality.

Activated Charcoal Used To Prevent 2,4-D Harm

Crop plants can be protected from harm by 2,4-D used for killing weeds by preplanting treatment with powdered activated charcoal. The treatment is of especial value for crops that are set out as young plants already rooted. This is done by dusting the roots with the activated charcoal powder before planting, greatly reducing loss caused by 2,4-D.

Fly Immunity to DDT Is Debatable Question

Some Insects Develop Strain of Resistance

Do flies become immune or resistant to DDT after it has been used for a few years?

This question arises from the fact that a few fly-control failures on farms where DDT was effective in other years have been hard to account for. The explanation was that the flies probably had become resistant to the chemical.

Uncle Sam's entomologists admit that insects can develop resistance to the insecticides used against them, as in the case of the apple codling moth against which lead arsenate lost its effectiveness. Moreover, Uncle Sam's bug men say they have, in the laboratory, been able to develop a DDT-resistant strain of flies. It is not likely that a DDT-resistant strain would develop naturally in the short time since DDT was first used.

It is more reasonable to believe that the occasional failure on farms where DDT already has been used with good results is due to carelessness or inferior product.

One thing in particular that should accompany the use of DDT is the destruction or removal of fly breeding places, such as manure piles, weed piles, old stack bottoms and wet spots in barnyards. One or more such spots may be able to turn out flies faster than DDT can kill them, for DDT is not noted for fast action. A fly may survive for hours after alighting on a surface coated with DDT.

The LETTER BOX

Editor, Times-Virginian
Dear Sir:

I was thoroughly shocked the other day when I was told about a petition by the Appomattox High School against the sale of beer in the Town of Appomattox being void because they weren't old enough. It seems to me that when high school students take such a stand, their petition should not only be classed as official but they should be praised too.

The grown-ups of the Town talk much about the young folks these days and the use of beer, whiskey etc. by same. How are we young folks going to know what is right when the older people encourage the sale of beer right in the heart of Appomattox?

The Town is full of children who go by the examples set by the older folks. This is also true of the young people. Do you think the seller or sellers of such stuff, if they thought anything of themselves or their friends, would sell beer right in town among the young? I think not.

This old world is soon coming to an end, and with it the end of all beer, whiskey and other Hell winners. This will be the time when all the people who voted for such stuff will be shown where they were wrong. May "God have pity on them, for they know not what they do."

P. S. The above is not true of all the older folks of Appomattox. There are still a few who think of their childrens' future, the town's decency, and the welfare of the citizens.

Farm Meat Dollar

Source of data: U.S. Dept. of Agriculture

About a third of the American farmers' cash income last year came from the sale of meat animals. Meat packers paid out almost 10 billion dollars for livestock. From their total cash income, livestock producers paid out large amounts for stock, feed, help and increased operating costs.

Tests Show Tung Meal Poisonous to Chickens

Tung meal proved unsatisfactory as a source of protein in chick rations in tests conducted at the Florida agricultural experiment station. The tung meal proved poisonous, whether raw, heated or heated and sifted. It caused heavy mortality at 10 and 15 per cent levels. At 5 per cent and higher levels the tung meal interfered with feed utilization and growth.
